BACHELOR OF SCIENCE IN EXCEPTIONAL STUDENT EDUCATION (ESE): SPECIAL EDUCATION, EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATIONS, & POLICY TRACK

ABOUT THE PROGRAM

The Special Education, Educational Foundations, and Policy Track focuses on exposing students to educational and foundational policies for individuals with special needs. Students will learn about the specific cognitive, language, and social/emotional developmental needs for individuals with disabilities from ages 5-22. Students will also learn about general and early educational practices and curricula. Students will select cognates within the track that will provide strategic planning for advanced degrees in areas that serve individuals with special education, policy advocacy, law, business, health services, mental health and public administration. (Note: This track does not result in teacher certification. Licensure requirements may vary by state, which may include specific course requirements. Please check with the Department of Education where you intend to teach to confirm certification requirements.)

Individuals with exceptionalities require special education services in a variety of settings through their lifetime. This degree provides the foundational training that will lead you to a career for working with individuals with disabilities. In addition, topics will cover individual educational plans, needs of individuals in consideration of environmental restrictions, personal safety, behavior, inclusion and collaboration with parents and other education personnel, planning for culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds, and making future goals.
